

Weekly Newsletter

Over at Western Rifle Shooters (and many of you have signed up for this newsletter from there) they asked a very important question: Are we really too FUBAR to be able to fight effectively? There were 229 comments that should be read. But, this is an internal question I have been asking for a long time, years. The truth is, we, the liberty and freedom loving traditional Americans, haven't been able to put two rifles on the same target for a long time.

That knowledge has led me down the road I have traveled with the blogs and now with this newsletter. I have stridently urged folks to cooperate. That was the intent of the Patcons, to get folks together, to build alliances with each other, face to face. The idea of us sitting in our homes, locked and loaded, but waiting to see the communist columns coming down our streets, through our windows, before we act is itself a failure to act.

Great issues of the day have been needing to be resolved, but we have abdicated our responsibilities, because our responsibility is to head off the communist columns long before they get to our streets. Simply identifying them as such, is at least a step in the right direction, but not nearly enough. The communist spearheads into our national psyche began long ago and maybe it is irresistible, because every government seeks total power over its people. If it cannot get that power through brutal oppression, it will come through the institutions.

I am not the only one talking about these issues, I know. It is a common worry and concern. To me, the gig is up. Trying to head it off, to prevent it from taking over is lost, if it had ever been engaged in the first place. So, I have taken another view of the crisis and it is a crisis, is that there might be a point of deflection, where the communists have a chance to expose their true beliefs and ultimately a great many more traditional Americans, of all races, reject these initiatives and the people behind them. Or, we sink into a collectivist nightmare and the inevitable purges take place that create the underground rebellion and I am able to see a resurgence of freedom take root.

One thing for sure is we are in a transitive state. We are no longer one thing. We are at the boiling point, both water and steam. We are not America in anything other than name. So, the question of "IF" we become a communist state is a foregone conclusion, we are transiting into the official designation at this very moment.

What we have to decide is how do we start the insurgency? And, when I speak of this, I am not talking about rebelling against the United States, that no longer exists. The United States is a stuffed head on a wall, a trophy of collectivists from around the globe. The question is are we capable of an insurgency? Who are our allies? Our enemies? What are our methods? Our tools? Where are our yellow vests?

I have given up on the idea of traditional Americans rising up and getting into the streets, which was the only way to prevent collectivism from taking hold, by showing the resistance to ideas such as the "Green New Deal." But, they have many more whacky ideas in store as soon as they get their hands on the military and don't think for a second that is not the only thing keeping them in check from their worst impulses.

It really is a fight to the death, you understand. All of these things like the Red Flag laws are just tests, to see what they can get done without taking losses. They are probing actions. Post-birth abortions are to see how much revulsion we can stand. Racial reparations are to see how far they can exploit white guilt. The "free" things: healthcare, college tuition, base salaries, are the rewards to the masses for enabling collectivism.

How much self-destruction can they manage before they have to become proactive? From their comfortable chairs in congress, on school boards, in corporate offices they ponder these questions of war without the slightest bit of regret or hesitance. It is little comfort to the patriot that when the real masters come, these conspirators will be swept away in one of the first purges with the rest of us. Poetic justice will not suffice.

My personal estimation is that 2020 is the last year of anything like the freedom we have even now. Guns will be confiscated and the Supreme Court, even as conservative as it is now, will rule these laws constitutional, because, why not? When rights become subject to court ruling rather than logical conclusion, the Constitution is already irrelevant, which happened about 1788, or thereabouts.

It is time to harden up, make whatever alliances you can, consider barter as a long-term wealth strategy and by that I mean buy now, what will be good barter in the future. Don't worry about that gun confiscation trend, the real fight won't involve guns at all. If we win, we can restore that right, if we lose, it won't matter anyway. I'm not saying to volunteer your guns, volunteer nothing to these communists, but they will take them and it will all be official and for the better good, you see.
