

A Side to Fight On

The language of genocide (against whites) has been in use for a long time and has recently been picked up by representatives and senators. That's how far we have come.

We are reminded that discussing the crimes committed and conspiracies hatched by the FBI will be considered terrorist activity just as those crimes and conspiracies were about to break and the false flag engineers were careful to leave "white nationalist" posts on one of the shooters Facebook pages.

No, I don't know that El Paso was a false flag, but there have been so many and it seems to get worse every time the government does not ban weapons that it appears to be agenda-driven. That is just an observation from someone who has been pretty accurately predicting the moves and motives of the federal government for more than a decade.

When gun owners did not react favorably to the Red Flag laws by turning in their weapons, they were just asking to have the heat turned up. When resistance to Red Flag laws and their absence of due process began to get traction, they ensured it. It has gone this way over and over since Columbine and whether the cart is in front of the horse or behind makes no difference, there is always a cart and always a horse in the scenario.

Donald Trump is not helping matters. It is his DOJ, though he does not seem to be in touch with their activities on a daily basis, as someone who understands the role of the president should. His failure to address the slow-motion coup effectively and immediately has led to this understanding by the FBI that they will not be held accountable, no matter how vile and inhumane their actions, no matter how illegal or corrupt their activities. So, they press on.

If one objectively looks at the actions of the federal government and does not see a correlation between that and what King George III practiced as a means of "controlling" the colonists, then they don't want to get it, don't want to see it and are complicit with it.

When a government commits an act, they understand the consequences. King George knew what the Stamp Act would do; he understood what the Tea Tax would do; he understood that his spies would engender resentment and the harder he tried to clamp down, the more resistance would grow. His intent was to flush out the rebels and squash them. Sound familiar? Our own government understands this, too. They cannot let us live in peace, because their agenda is to control us, to control everything, but we do not see them "controlling" Antifa, because they know what would happen then, too. That is the sort of tyranny they want, the sort of chaos that enables their tightening noose.

We have come far enough down this road to see that the "good cop" myth is just that, a myth. If there were Constitutionally-bound agents, where are they? Why have they not utilized whatever weight they have to address the crimes against the republic committed by their leaders? This is no longer a struggle between the legal and illegal, this is a matter of principles and lack of principles.

I don't know how far down the road it goes; I am surprised to have seen it go this far. There are declared communists walking the halls of congress openly determined to bring down this republic, to turn it into some mobocracy that they control and there is no one within the DOJ or DOD to recognize them as a national security threat? What else can one do, but prepare to defend oneself from that mob?

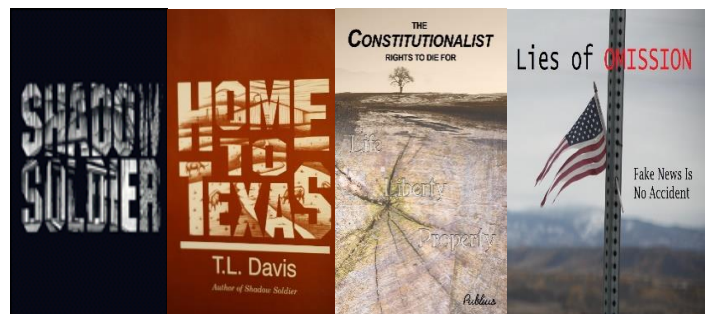

This should not be a matter of whether the FBI can subdue the patriots, or not. It should not be a test of wills or a measurement of firepower. Why should a patriot have to worry about members of the FBI and their allegiance? Does that not suggest that we have already come too far?

That we are peaceful people, mostly concerned with making a living, trying to live a decent life and provide for our children is why this is not a bigger issue. We believe, beyond all evidence that things will sort themselves out, that there are patriots at every level of society; even in the government.

Grudgingly and only with overwhelming evidence do we come to the conclusion, so clear to those who have suffered the oppression and indignity of communism, that our leaders, our fellow citizens in the FBI and military, have actually switched sides.

Let's be brutally honest, a few guys with guns are not going to alter the trajectory of the forces allied against the constitutional republic. That will have to come from within, (most likely military) among those dedicated patriots who are at the very center of the outrages, witness to the corrupted justification for the outrages and even participating in the outrages. They have to see them for what they are; they have to see the swastika or the hammer and sickle emerging from the stars and stripes themselves and reject it. They have to give us a side to fight on.

Disobedience is patriotism.
